

Curriculum vitae, Paul Cairney

Paul Cairney (PhD, FAcSS) is Professor of Politics and Public Policy at the University of Stirling. His research expertise covers the theory, practice, and politics of public policy. It spans comparisons of policy theories and their methods, international policy processes, UK and devolved policymaking, and policy sectors (including health and environment). He has written or co-written 13 books, 92 articles in international peer reviewed journals, and 31 chapters in edited books. His Google Scholar h is 54 (11478 citations).

He uses these insights to foster academic-practitioner discussions on: (1) current debates on the performance of political systems, such as their use of evidence in policy analysis, policy design, and policymaking processes (including work co-produced with the European Commission and while a Special Adviser to the Scottish Parliament's Finance and Public Administration Committee inquiry into effective government); and, (2) why there is a gap between high policy ambitions and low evidence of delivery (co-produced with public health agencies in the UK and Ireland). Since 2016, he has delivered over 100 keynote lectures or invited talks to academic-practitioner audiences.

He was Special Advisor to the Scottish Parliament's Commission on Parliamentary Reform (2017) and has provided written and oral evidence to multiple committees of the Scottish Parliament, National Assembly for Wales, and Northern Ireland Assembly (topics include intergovernmental relations, policy learning, UK and devolved finance, and long-term preventive policymaking). He is invited regularly to contribute to national and international newspapers, TV, and radio.

He has secured regular funding to coordinate and conduct research - approximately £750,000 from consortium funding over £7m - including from the Economic and Social Research Council (Centre on Constitutional Change) to compare UK and Scottish policymaking (2013-15), the UKRI's UK Energy Research Centre (UKERC) programme on multi-level energy policy in the context of Brexit (2017-18), and the European Research Council project 'IMAJINE' to learn from policies to reduce inequalities (2017-22).

He has edited the journal Evidence & Policy (2020-21, with Professor Kat Smith), the Politics of Evidence Based Policymaking section of Humanities & Social Sciences Communications (2017-20), and Special Issues of Politics & Policy (2018, with Professor Chris Weible) and the Journal of European Public Policy (2023). He is an advisory board member of several journals, and has provided peer reviews for over 100 journals. He has performed ESRC and ERC peer reviewer and rapporteur roles since 2005, and reviewed funding for multiple international funding bodies.

He currently co-supervises 3 interdisciplinary PhDs on policy and policymaking (plus 6 co-supervised to completion). He has performed UG or PGT external examiner roles at GCU, UCL, and Edinburgh, and has been the external examiner of 21 PhDs.

He designs and delivers the Master of Public Policy. His commitment to student learning includes a major investment to connect book projects – such as Understanding Public Policy, and The Politics of Policy Analysis – to a personal website containing short summaries of key concepts and issues in policy analysis and policymaking. This site now attracts 250,000 hits per year, totalling 2 million hits from 992,000 visits.

- Recent work documented in blog for SKAPE and this post on my ongoing work with the European Commission
 - A key part of the ESRC Centre on Constitutional Change project focused on how the Scottish Government and Scottish Parliament can identify and encourage ‘best practice’ in prevention policy. This involved two presentations to the Scottish Government (2014 and 2015) and an academic-practitioner workshop bringing together the Scottish Parliament’s finance committee with civil servants and practitioners in local government, public bodies, and the third sector, to discuss evidence based policymaking.
 - I chaired a Political Quarterly workshop in October 2014, which brought together academics - presenting draft papers to the special issue The Scottish Independence Referendum: What are the Implications of a No Vote? (volume 86, 2, 2015) - with UK and Scotland civil servants and representatives of local government and the third sector.

- Paul Cairney (2015) ‘The Smith Commission: will greater powers come with greater democratic accountability?’ in Charlie Jeffery and Nicola McEwen Beyond Smith: Contributions to the continuing process of Scottish devolution (Edinburgh: Future of the UK and Scotland, Centre on Constitutional Change)
- Strong links to the Study of Parliament Group Scotland. For example, I set up two panels at the PSA 2010 to bring together practitioners and academics. I have presented a paper to both SPG panels at Westminster and Holyrood, and given evidence at the Scottish Parliament’s Convenors’ Group in 2010 and its Clerks’ Group in 2011.
- From 2010-14, I was part of a team teaching public policy to Scottish Government civil servants (three 3-day courses per year).
- Regular contributor to lectures and seminars for high school students (through ‘Modern Studies Days’ and school visits) and their teachers (CPD seminars and school visits).

Blog and Media Activity

- I maintain a personal blog: <http://paulcairney.wordpress.com/> which has 250k hits per year (total 2m by 2023)
- I maintained a weekly column for The Conversation in the run up to the UK General Election 2015 and still contribute regularly
- I have provided guest posts for outlets including the Guardian, LSE, Conversation, Democratic Audit, ESRC Future of the UK and Scotland Programme, SCVO, University of Strathclyde, and E-IR (details here: <http://paulcairney.wordpress.com/indyref/>)
